

The do-not-call list in my opinion is something that should have been implemented years ago. I can't count how many times my family has been interrupted by a telemarketer on a weekend. We have even told the callers to take us off of their lists. But yet we would still get repeated calls night after night. After reading the brief article on this act I found myself agreeing with some things and disagreeing with others. One point in particular was the fee we would be charged for putting ourselves on the registry. I don't think we should be charged a fee for getting rid of something we never asked for in the first place. I think it would be a good idea to make a list of those who put themselves on the list so you can see how much it is in demand. That will also help the follow up on how effective it actually is. After this act has been implemented for a year or so I think we will have a better idea of its usefulness and effectiveness. So overall I am for the do-not-call act. It will mean more free time and less annoyance during your time at home. Thank you.
